One Man Was Right

Sen. William Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says his group has received enough information to be convinced that blame for the Cuban invasion fiasco should be shared by the Central Intelligence Agency, the White House and the State and Defense Departments.

He didn't say so, because he is too modest, but it is understood in Washington that Fulbright alone opposed the venture. He favors stopping communism in the Americas by improving the living standard of the people.

The whole situation must seem ironical to Fulbright, who was the No. 1 candidate for secretary of state until it was whispered that New York Democrats and foreign delegates to the United Nations would object to the fact that he is from Arkansas. Yet he has taken more political risks for liberalism, by going counter to the Gov. Faubus policies, than any of his breast-beating critics. What price statesmanship!
